

Experiments in Education

A Special Symposium Issue on

Humiliation in the Academic Setting

2007

Editor

Dr. D. Raja Ganesan

Guest Editor

Philip M. Brown*

One of the 2007 issues of Experiments in Education will be a symposium on the theme 'Humiliation in the Academic Setting'. It can be thought of as a follow up of the editorial, 'The Feeling of Being Humiliated in the Classroom' carried in our January 2001 issue.

The aim of the proposed symposium is to highlight the varieties of humiliation generated and suffered in the larger academic setting. An announcement about this symposium inviting contributions has been put up in the website of the Human Dignity and Humiliation Studies www.humiliationstudies. This is an international network of academics and professionals committed to the eventual elimination of humiliation from the face of the earth, founded by Dr. Evelin Gerda Lindner, affiliated, among others, to the Conflict Resolution Network, Columbia University, U.S.A.

Contributions from scholars are invited for this symposium. The length and format as well as the types of contributions are broadly the same as given in our guidelines to contributors on the third cover page.

Contributions may please be sent by e-mail to the guest editor, Dr. Philip M. Brown at pmbrown@rci.rutgers.edu with a copy to the editor, Dr. D. Raja Ganesan, at drajaganesan@rediffmail.com.

* Dr. Philip M. Brown currently serves as Director of the New Jersey Center for Character Education, located in the Graduate School of Applied and Professional Psychology at Rutgers University. The New Jersey Center for Character Education provides professional development and consultation to programs that serve 800,000 students each year.